EARN MONEY BY WRITING FOR NATIONAL VANGUARD

Reader feedback is urgently required on two levels: firstly, the editor would like to know if readers enjoy the split between 'in-depth articles' and hard news, or if more space should be given to one or the other.

Secondly, we are of course always looking for more writers, so please submit them in e-mail or on a disk. The publishers have decided to offer yearly cash prizes for the best 'investigative journalistic' article submitted: first prize will be $250, second prize $100.

All articles we use become the property of National Vanguard Books unless otherwise stated, and we are not responsible for items mailed to us, so please have copies made.

We welcome manuscripts or articles: please send them to the address above.

The symbol which appears in the NATIONAL VANGUARD logotype is the Life Rune. It comes from an ancient alphabet, or futhark, used in northern Europe for many centuries before the general adoption of the Roman alphabet. The Life Rune signifies life, creation, birth, rebirth, and renewal. It expresses in a single symbol the raison d'être of NATIONAL VANGUARD and of the movement of Aryan renewal.

THE GLORY OF ROME:

One of the Greatest Eras of Our Race

There is hardly a person alive who has not heard of the civilization of Rome nor of at least some of its outstanding leaders: Julius Caesar, Octavian Augustus, Hadrian, Nero . . . yet too few people realize the huge debt which the entire modern world owes this great White civilization.

It is no exaggeration to say that our European civilization would not have been the same without the influence of the Romans, both physically and intellectually.

Spectacular modern cities, not the least of which was Rome, were founded by this great nation. London, for example, the capital of the United Kingdom, was founded by the Romans under the name Londinium. The ancient German city of Cologne was founded by Romans as Colonia Agrippina, to name but two prominent examples. Yet it not only in military conquest or empire building that ancient Rome showed its greatness: its legacy extends far further.

Latin – the father of many modern European languages

French, Italian, Portuguese, Rhaeto-Romantsch (spoken in the Canton Grison in Switzerland), Rumanian, and Spanish area all direct descendants of the language of Imperial Rome. English and German draw much of their etymological origins from Latin: a modern example rarely appreciated is the word “video” which comes directly from the Latin word to “see.” Another less well known Latin origin word is ambulance (“ambulare”) amongst hundreds more.

A model of the city of Rome, showing the Circus Maximus and the Coliseum. The model is located in the Museo della Civiltà Romana, a museum built by Benito Mussolini in the 1930s.

The Alphabet

When we use the phrase “Easy as A-B-C” we are actually referring to the Roman alphabet. This is the alphabet which the Western World – read the White World – has adopted and, as a result, is the lingua franca of the civilized world. Although there have been a few minor changes – such as the letter “W” being added to it, the alphabet we use is virtually identical to that in which the great Caesars of old wrote.

The Twelve Tables and the Justinian Code

Roman law developed many of the ideas of justice which we today take for granted. The Roman “Twelve Tables” were created in 451 BC, and were modified by the later Emperor Justinian, who refined Roman law into the Justinian Code in AD 529. These laws form the basis of all today’s justice systems in the Western World.

Sports Stadiums

The largest sports stadium in Rome was the Circus Maximus, which could seat up to 300,000 people and could be filled with water to re-enact sea battles between regular sized ships. The Circus Maximus was built in the 6th century B.C. and stood for centuries before being broken up to build Christian Churches, but to this day its remains stand as a tribute to what was the largest sports stadium ever built anywhere in the world, unequalled to this day.

The Circus Maximus was far larger than the far better known Coliseum, but the latter building is more famous because it has survived almost intact into the modern era. The Coliseum could hold a mere 50,000 seats when originally built, and was completed in 81 AD. It was built by the Flavian Emperors, and its proper name was the Flavian Amphitheater, and only took the name Coliseum from a huge statue of the Emperor Nero which once stood nearby.

Medical Advancements

the first to understand that blood was pushed around the body by the heart and he knew that nerves controlled the movement of the body.

Aqueducts

The Romans were masters at supplying fresh running water to their settlements. For this purpose they developed fresh water supplies running many miles to Roman and other major centers, carefully building the aqueducts and canals so that upon arrival, the water had enough pressure to be pumped into upstairs apartments for use as we would do today in taps.

The challenge of building aqueducts was huge: land surveying techniques were developed to ensure that the water ran unaided along its chosen path and would get into the city without either stagnating or flowing too fast. The slope of the aqueducts had to be perfect to ensure a constant and steady supply of water.

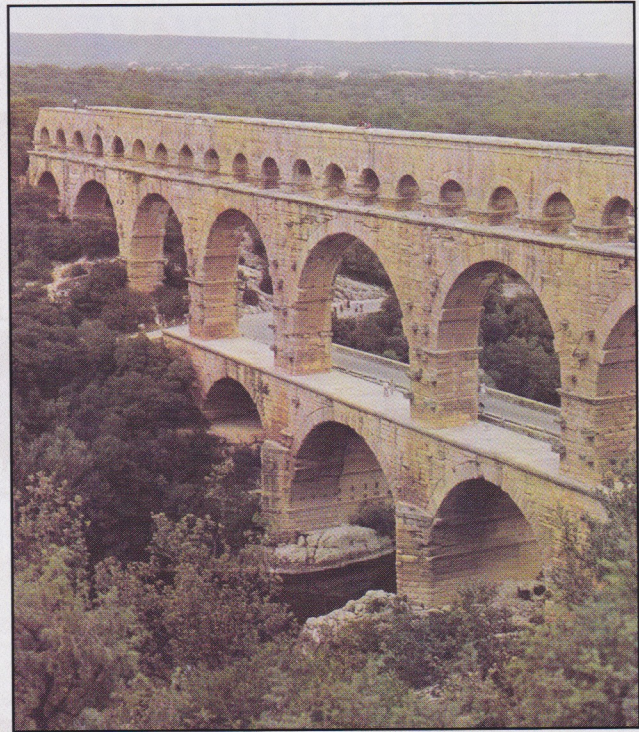

The city of Rome itself had the largest concentration of aqueducts, with water being supplied by eleven aqueducts constructed over a period of 500 years, with a combined length of nearly 260 miles. Many Roman aqueducts were constructed underground (the Eifel Aqueduct in Germany provides a very well-preserved example). The longest Roman aqueduct was the one built in the 2nd century AD to supply Carthage in what is now Tunisia, which ran for 87 miles.

They were built to remarkably fine tolerances: the aqueduct of which Pont du Gard in Provence was a part had a gradient of only 13.3 inches per 0.62 miles (1:3,000), descending only 55.7 feet vertically in its entire length of 16.9 miles. They were powered entirely by gravity, transporting very large amounts of water very efficiently (the Pont du Gard carried 44 million gallons a day). Sometimes, where deep depressions had to be crossed, pressurized pipelines called inverted siphons were used to force water uphill. Modern hydraulic engineers use similar techniques to enable sewers and water pipes to cross depressions.

Far from being an anachronistic ancient oddity, aqueducts, built using the same Roman principles, are used to supply water to many of the largest cities in the United States. Los Angeles, for example, draws much of its water from the Owens River by means of an aqueduct more than 230 miles long. Most of the supply for New York City is conducted through the Catskill Aqueduct and the Croton Aqueduct.

Roman Roads

Roman roads often ran in a straight line, regardless of obstacles, and were efficiently constructed, generally in four layers of materials. They often used deep roadbeds of crushed stone as an underlying layer to ensure that they kept dry, as the water would flow out from the crushed stone, instead of becoming mud in clay soils. The uppermost layer was a pavement of flat, hard stones, concrete, or pebbles set in mortar. Many modern roads are laid out on their routes, and some of the old bridges are still in use. At its peak, the Roman road system spanned 50,000 miles.

Firefighters

After a quarter of Rome burned down in 6 AD, the Emperor Augustus created the Vigiles, a corps of firefighters made up of seven thousand freed slaves, who won the right to citizenship after six years' service. A century later, free born men were entering the unit for the prestige it brought – by then it was ranked the equivalent of an elite military unit. The main fire fighting engine they employed was based on a design developed by the inventor Heron in Roman controlled Egypt: a piston driven by a rocker arm pivoting on a post in the center of the device. With the collapse of the Roman Empire, state fire fighting units disappeared, to only reappear in the 15th Century.

Roman Architectural Innovations

The Romans developed unique basilicas, baths, amphitheaters, and triumphal arches. Unlike their Greek prototypes, Roman theaters were freestanding structures. The auditorium was semicircular, with movable seats at the orchestra level. Distinctly Roman innovations were the uniting of stage and auditorium as a single structure and the rich architectural embellishment of the stage itself. For the oval amphitheaters such as the Coliseum, there are no known Greek precedents. The monumental or triumphal arch was also a purely Roman invention. The basilica, a Roman development based on the Greek temple, provided a large and relatively open interior space. From its original use as a Roman law court, the basilica form was adapted by the Christians for their churches.

Apartment buildings

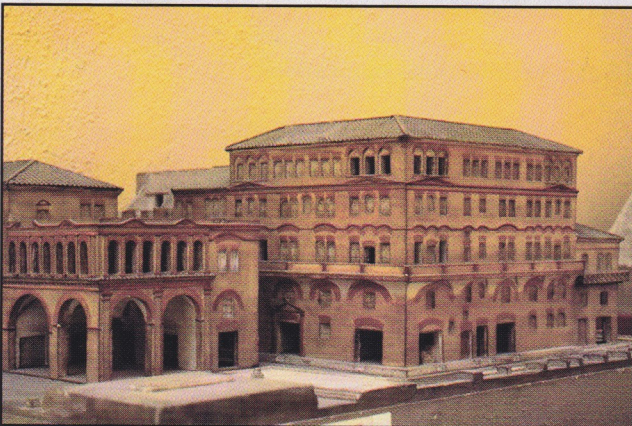

The Romans had developed the concept of apartment blocks by the 4th Century BC. The writings of the 1st Century BC architect, Vitruvius set out the thinking: "In view of the present importance of Rome, and the unlimited number of citizens, it is necessary to provide dwellings without number. There necessity has driven the Romans to build high. By the use of stone piers, crowning courses of burnt brick and concrete walls, high buildings are raised with several floors, producing highly convenient apartments. And so with walls raised high through various floors, the people of Rome have excellent dwellings without any hindrance." (De architectura, 8,4,1, trans. Morris Hickey Morgan, 1914)

In the best of these apartments, water pressure was generated by raising water towers higher than the structures themselves – in exactly the same way that modern water supplies are arranged – so that residents would have flowing water on tap. Toilets were connected to a sewer system, identical to that which we have today.

Baths

The Romans took the habit of bathing to an ultimate: their brilliance in plumbing helped them greatly, and their highly efficient heating systems allowed massive baths to be warmed on a 24-hour basis. The great baths were sumptuously decorated using lavish amounts of marble and doubled up as meeting houses for conversation, poetry, shopping centers and more. The Roman baths were all built according to the same basic plan: a division into rooms of different temperatures, with separate ones for women and men.

On entering, the bathers went first to the apodyterium, or undressing room, then into the first hot room, called the caldarium. These rooms did not always contain pools: rather they were superheated rooms where the bathers sat and sweated. The bathers moved from there to the tepidarium, or warm room, to cool off before going to the frigidarium, which contained baths of cold water.

The skin was cleaned mostly by the application of body rubs or oil with the latter being scraped off again by the ever present army of slaves.

Building Regulations

After a disastrous fire of AD 64, the Emperor Nero ordered the first building restrictions: new apartment blocks were not more than seventy feet in height, which restricted them to no more than six floors – an indication that earlier apartment blocks rose even higher than that. Some accounts have it that blocks of nine or ten floors were not unknown. Emperor Trajan, in the 2nd Century AD, further restricted apartment building height to sixty feet.

Roman Concrete

The structures were built using the remarkably strong waterproof cement developed by the Romans from pozzolana, a volcanic ash found near Naples, mixed with lime and pebbles or potsherds. Roman concrete provided much of the secret to the great building projects. Concrete was, and still is for that matter, a stronger and more readily available substitute for stone. Tile-covered concrete quickly supplanted marble as the primary building material and more daring buildings soon followed, with great pillars supporting broad arches and domes rather than dense lines of columns suspending flat architraves.

Although concrete is still regarded as the most important Roman contribution to the modern world, the Empire's style of architecture can still be seen throughout Europe and North America in the arches and domes of many governmental and religious buildings.

The Julian Calendar

Most calendars up to that time had the tendency to accumulate annual errors. With the passage of time, these errors became confusingly obvious and problematic. Julius Caesar decided that he would bring the confusion to an end, and introduced his own personal design, what became known as the Julian calendar, to the Roman world on 1 January 45 BC. Using the Egyptian solar calendar of 365 days, earlier discrepancies were solved by adding an extra day to the second month of every fourth year - the same method we still use today when we add an extra day to each leap year. This calendar has worked perfectly to this day (with one minor amendment being made in the 16th Century AD). The founder of our calendar was commemorated by having the month of July named after him.

Window Glass

A pane of Roman window glass from Pompeii.

The Romans were the first to develop flat glass to be used in windows. Glass would be blown into a large bulb, which would then be swung round until it formed a sausage shape. By opening and stretching, the sausage shape would be turned into a cylinder, which was split lengthwise with a red hot iron. The split cylinder was then reheated on the flat bed of an oven and drawn flat with pincers. The result was then mounted into window frames. The best surviving examples of Roman window panes are to be found in the city of Pompeii, which was covered in volcanic ash after the eruption of the volcano Vesuvius in AD 79. The oldest window pane in Pompeii comes from a building in the Forum that dates to about 60 BC. The largest windows in Pompeii were in the public baths, forty by twenty-eight inches and half an inch thick, mounted in brass frames. Glass factories were established by the Romans at Trier and Cologne, and in Britain after 50 AD.

The Odometer

The oldest surviving odometer design was made by the 1st Century BC architect, Vitruvius, which he called the "hodometer" as a device "which enables us, while sitting in a carriage on the road . . . to know how many miles of a journey we have accomplished." Vitruvius described the odometer's gear system and how each mile passed, a stone was dropped into a box, at the end of the journey the stones could be counted and the distance traveled accurately calculated.

The Abacus – The World's First Calculator

The Romans developed their hand-abacus as a portable counting board—the first portable calculating device for engineers, merchants and presumably tax collectors. It greatly reduced the time needed to perform the basic operations of Roman arithmetic using Roman numerals. The Roman abacus predates the 13th Century Chinese abacus by centuries, and was in all likelihood transmitted to the Chinese through the Roman trade with that civilization over the Silk Road.

Bridge Building

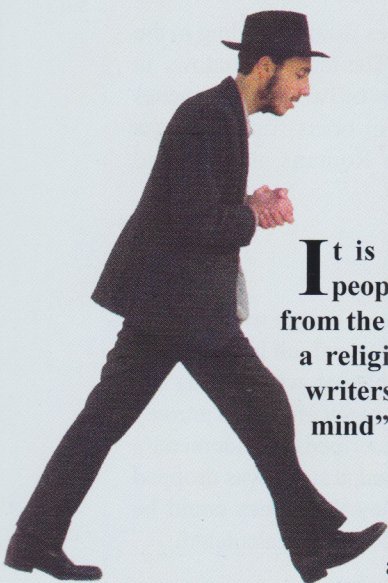

Roman Bridges are famous: but none more so than Trajan's bridge, the first bridge built on the lower Danube River, near what is now the city of Drobeta-Turnu Severin, Romania. The bridge was built to provide supplies for the Roman legions that were fighting in Dacia.

The Danube is 2624 feet wide at the location of the bridge, which extended past the river banks for a total length of 3723 feet. It was 49.2 feet wide and rose 62 feet above the water. The bridge was destroyed by Aurelian, after the Roman Empire withdrew its troops from Dacia. For a thousand years, it was the longest bridge built anywhere in the world.

Pesticides

The Roman historian Pliny (AD 77) recorded the Roman practice of soaking seeds in noxious liquids before sowing them to protect the resultant plants against insects. Pliny also detailed other methods used by Roman farmers:

Race or Religion? - The Genetics of Judaism

It is a question which has vexed people aware of the Jewish Question from the earliest times: Are Jews a race, a religion, or, as some distinguished writers have suggested a “race of the mind”?

Jews and their supporters have long since adopted the tactic of alternatively denying that Jews are a race – this in order to undermine accusations of group behavior – or have pleaded that they are a race – hence the “anti-Semitism” which seems to so often rear its head.

Professional anthropology has traditionally been reluctant to give racial status to the Jews. The primary reason for this is of course that many of these “anthropologists” have been Jews themselves, but that is another matter. Almost none of the Gentile anthropologists today will even admit that there is such a thing as a “Jewish race” although Carleton Coon found definite uniformity of cephalic indexes, facial structure, and coloration among Russian and Polish Jews, who account for 80 percent of the American Jewish population. (Coon, The Races of Europe, pp 643-644).

Historical Accounts of Jewish Origin

Historically speaking, Jews are Semites, a genetically distinct category which some have classed as belonging to the “near Eastern branch of the Mediterranean Race.” (Robertson, The Dispossessed Majority, p30). Doubtless, true White racially conscious Mediterraneans will take issue with this, as their ire is indeed justified by the latest genetic research, as outlined below.

It is however, true that when Jewry was dispersed during their “disapora” from the Middle following the Roman smashing of the Jewish rebellion in 70 AD, two distinct genetic types of Jews have emerged: the Sephardic and Ashkenazim.

The Sephardic Jews were scattered along the coast of North Africa and penetrated

Spain and Portugal, rising to high positions within those countries during the Moorish invasion of the Iberian Peninsula. The Sephardic Jews largely retained their olive skin and long headedness of the original Semitic origin, and possibly are the most “stereotypical” Jews the average gentile thinks of when the word “Jew” is mentioned.

The Ashkenazim Jews, on the other hand have, by their deeper penetration of Europe, and Eastern Europe in particular, acquired a lighter coloration and even blondism due to admixture with Europeans, and display a degree of round headedness, probably from intermarriage with Armenoids and Alpine Slavs.

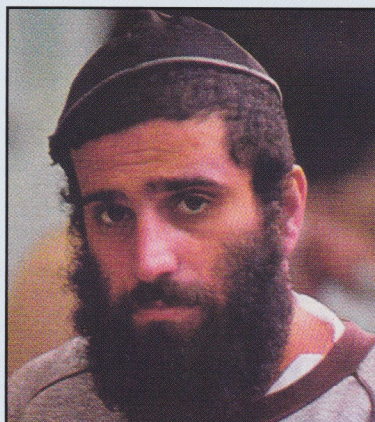

Another important element – which was widely debated in both Jewish and anti-Jewish circles – was the influence of the Khazar tribe, a Near Middle Eastern grouping located in the deep south of Russia bordering onto the Middle East. This tribe converted to Judaism en masse and, according to the “Khazar theory,” consequently contributed a large portion to the Ashkenazim gene pool. Until the science of genetics came into its own, this theory remained one of the most hotly debated topics in the history of Ashkenazim Jewry.

Genetic Studies Clear the Air

The first genetic studies of male Y-chromosome, female mtDNA, and autosomal markers of Jews from around the world, have now conclusively demonstrated that Jews do indeed derive most of their ancestry from the Middle East and have little in common, genetically speaking, with the Europeans among whom they live.

In addition, research in the field of molecular genetics has shown that Jewish populations of the various Diaspora communities have retained their genetic identity throughout the exile. Despite large geographic distances between the communities and the passage of thousands of years, far removed Jewish communities share a similar genetic profile.

Initial studies, in 2000 and 2001, found that Jewish men from communities which developed in the Near East — Iran, Iraq, Kurdistan, Yemen — and European Jews have very similar, almost identical genetic profiles. A report published by the National Academy of Science in May 2000, put it this way:

"Despite their long-term residence in different countries and isolation from one another, most Jewish populations were not significantly different from one another at the genetic level. The results support the hypothesis that the paternal gene pools of Jewish communities from Europe, North Africa and the Middle East descended from a common Middle Eastern ancestral population, and suggest that most Jewish communities have remained relatively isolated from neighboring non-Jewish communities during and after the Diaspora." - (M.F. Hammer, Proc. National Academy of Science, May 9, 2000)

Dispute Over non-Jewish Female Admixture

The New York Times, in an article titled "In DNA, New Clues to Jewish Roots" (May 14, 2002), then announced that a study conducted in 2001 had found that female non-Jewish admixture was the greatest source of new genetic material amongst Jews, and that the male line appeared to be the "most Jewish" in both Sephardic and Ashkenazim Jewry. The NYT wrote:

"The emerging genetic picture is based largely on two studies, one published two years ago and the other this month, that together show that the men and women who founded the Jewish communities had surprisingly different genetic histories."

"A new study now shows that the women in nine Jewish communities from Georgia, the former Soviet republic, to Morocco have vastly different genetic histories from the men. In each community, the women carry very few genetic signatures on their mitochondrial DNA, a genetic element inherited only through the female line. This indicates that the community had just a small number of founding mothers and that after the founding event there was little, if any, interchange with the host population. The women's identities, however, are a mystery, because, unlike the case with the men, their genetic signatures are not related to one another or to those of present-day Middle Eastern populations."

New Studies Show Uniformity of Female Jewish Line

However, the most recent research (2004) has contradicted this earlier study quoted by the New York Times, and showed that the Ashkenazim maternal gene pool is also predominantly Near Eastern in origin, with only minor European admixture. An article in the European Journal of Human Genetics, January 2004, stated the following:

"While several Ashkenazi Jewish mtDNA Hgs appear to derive from the Near East, there is also evidence for a low level of introgression from host European non-Jewish populations. . . . diversity patterns provide evidence for a prolonged period of low effective size in the history of the Ashkenazi population. The data best fit a model of an early bottleneck (~100 generations ago), perhaps corresponding to initial migrations of ancestral Ashkenazim in the Near East or to Europe."

"The observed mutational frequency peak for the Ashkenazi and Near Eastern non-Jewish populations is similar and consistent with the age of the Pleistocene expansion, which is older than that inferred from the mutational frequency peak for European non-Jews. This is consistent with a Near East origin for a major portion of the Ashkenazi Jewish mtDNA pool." (Behar et al. MtDNA evidence for a genetic bottleneck in the early history of the Ashkenazi Jewish population. European Journal of Human Genetics, January 2004)

Jewish Diseases" Reflect Closed Founding Population

The existence of Jewish specific diseases also confirms the small founding population theory. Dr. Harry Ostrer, a medical geneticist at New York University, said the 26 specific genetic diseases found among

Ashkenazim, usually attributed to "founder effects," could be explained by the idea of a mosaic of small populations. A founder effect amplifies any mutation present in a small population that later expands.

Male Line Predominantly Jewish

The 2000 report on Jewish male lineage (M.F. Hammer, National Academy of Science, May 9, 2000) estimated that Ashkenazi male lineages are about 77% Jewish/Middle Eastern. A 23% European male admixture amounts to an accretion of less than 0.5% per generation. A newer study estimates an even lower European male contribution:

"(A)dmixture analysis . . . suggests that 5%–8% of the Ashkenazi gene pool is . . . comprised of Y chromosomes that may have introgressed from non-Jewish European populations" - (Behar et al. Contrasting patterns of Y chromosome variation in Ashkenazi Jewish and host non-Jewish European populations. Human Genetics. 2004 March; 114(4):354–65.)

Autosomal Markers

More than two decades ago, using a small number of 'classical' markers, the well-known left leaning geneticists Carmelli and Cavalli-Sforza (1979) found that Jews cluster genetically with Near Easterners.

"A wide scatter of the Jews was observed among clusters of non-Jews, probably due to drift [Note: Ashkenazis fall squarely within the Near Eastern cluster, with various Jewish isolates being the outliers]. However, the centroid of the Jewish populations mapped in the Middle East cluster. . . . We can conclude by using Rh and Hp frequencies that the Jewish populations show a greater similarity to their ancestral origin. According to Mourant et al. (1976), "Jews from Europe, almost indistinguishable from their European non-Jewish neighbors by their ABO and MN groups, show by their Rh groups that physically they are more nearly related to their Mediterranean ancestors."

- (Carmelli, D. & Cavalli-Sforza, L.L. The Genetic Origin of the Jews: A Multivariate Approach. Human Biology 1979 Feb; 51(1):41–61)

Carmelli and Cavalli-Sforza did conclude that Ashkenazi have "significant" European admixture, but it should be understood that half the markers in this study involved the ABO and MN blood groups. The ABO system in particular is thought to respond selectively to epidemic disease. The authors even mention that "it should also be noted that if genetic similarity between a Jewish group and non-Jewish groups living in the same geographic area is restricted to one or a few loci, it is not observed at most other loci; the more likely interpretation calls for convergent selection at that locus rather than for admixture. Thus, single locus studies are potentially misleading. Unfortunately, the number of loci studied here is not large."

A.G. Motulsky (1980, in Population Structure and Disorders, eds. Eriksson, A. W., Forsius, H. R., Nezanlinna, H. R., Workman, P. L. & Norio, R. K. (Academic, New York), pp. 353–365.), using a larger number of markers, estimated that Ashkenazi have only 12.5% European admixture; and, since it is likely that some of the loci used here were subject to selection, even this lower estimate may overstate the actual level of European admixture.

Phenotypical Jewish Types

An article published in the journal "Human Biology" in May 1985, pointed out that

"(C)luster analysis clearly indicates that Jewish populations are much closer to one another than to non-Jewish neighbour groups. In the second analysis, 25 ethnoterritorial groups of the USSR (one Jewish and the rest non-Jewish) were evaluated on the basis of 27 anthropometric characters. The latter Jewish group was markedly separate from the other 24 ethnic groups, and especially distinct when only traits with high coefficients of heritability were employed." - (Kobyliansky E, Livshits G., Hum Biol 1985 May-Jun;12(3):203–12, A morphological approach to the problem of the biological similarity of Jewish and non-Jewish populations.)

Jews even differ as a group in the area of tooth morphology: a study published in the American Journal of Physical Anthropology in June 1986 had the following to say:

"Samples from five Jewish and six non-Jewish populations were compared in terms of the frequencies of 19 dental morphological variables. All but one of the samples came from Europe, North Africa, or the Middle East. Nine were from contemporary populations, and two were skeletal. Of the skeletal groups, one was Jewish, excavated on Mount Zion, Jerusalem, and dated at around 3,000 years old; and the other non-Jewish, excavated on the east coast of Australia, and dated at between 1,000 and 2,000 years old. The results demonstrated relative proximity of the Jewish groups (with one exception), despite the fact that they came from a wide geographical area. In particular, the sample from Mount Zion showed greater affinity with three of the four living Jewish populations than with most non-Jewish groups."

"The similarity of the Jewish groups to each other in terms of both tooth morphology and single locus polymorphisms was of special interest, since differences in other morphological and anthropometric characteristics, thought to be the result of selection, are known to exist between the Jewish populations."

- (Sofaer JA, Smith P, Kaye E., Am J Phys Anthropol 1986 Jun;70(2):265-75, Affinities between contemporary and skeletal Jewish and non-Jewish groups based on tooth morphology.)

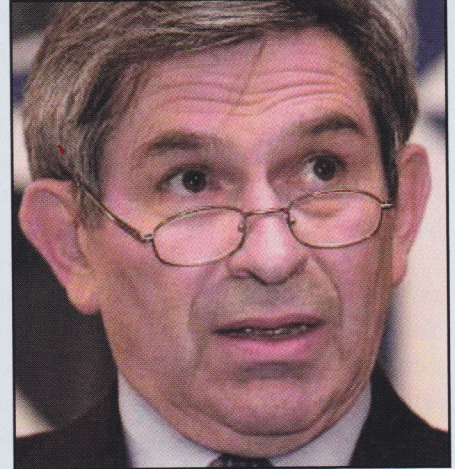

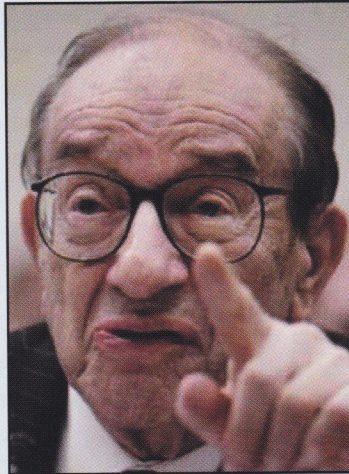

The "Khazar Theory" – Some Basis in Fact?

The "Khazar theory," mentioned above, has either been supported or rejected by both Jewish and non-Jewish sources. DNA has however, revealed that the theory is in fact at least partly true.

The New York Times, in an article published in September 2003, confirmed that a rabbinical class amongst the Jews do indeed have a Central Asian genetic string, different to the Middle Eastern genes which predominate amongst other Jews. The NYT wrote:

"A team of geneticists studying the ancestry of Jewish communities has found an unusual genetic signature that occurs in more than half the Levites of Ashkenazi descent. The signature is thought to have originated in Central Asia, not the Near East, which is the ancestral home of Jews. The finding raises the question of how the signature became so widespread among the Levites, an ancient caste of hereditary Jewish priests."

The NYT article was based on a report published in the American Journal of Human Genetics, which revealed that "52 percent of Levites of Ashkenazi origin have a particular genetic signature that originated in

Above left: Alan Greenspan, US Federal Reserve head, and World Bank president, Paul Wolfowitz. They are physically recognizable as Jews, something that would not be the case if there was no racial basis to Judaism. One cannot, for example, tell a Catholic or a Protestant just by looking at their faces.

Central Asia, although it is also found less frequently in the Middle East. The ancestor who introduced it into the Ashkenazi Levites could perhaps have been from the Khazars, a Turkic tribe whose king converted to Judaism in the eighth or ninth century, the researchers suggest."

"Their reasoning is that the signature, a set of DNA variations known as R1a1, is common in the region north of Georgia that was once occupied by the Khazar kingdom. The signature did reach the Near East, probably before the founding of the Jewish community, but it is still rare there. The scholars say they cannot exclude the possibility that a Jewish founder brought the signature on his Y chromosome to the Ashkenazi population, but they consider that a less likely explanation." - (Wade. N, New York Times 09/27/03, Geneticists Report Finding Central Asian Link to Levites)

DNA's Final Report

The conclusion from the DNA evidence is therefore incontrovertible: Jews are to the largest extent a definable race consisting for the greatest part of a Middle Eastern genetic base.

They are 'mixed' in the sense that there is an important Central Asian or Turkic ("Khazar") element within certain Jewish lines, and a small European admixture, particularly amongst the Ashkenazim Jews. In terms of genetic commonality, there is however, enough basis to cluster Jews genetically as a racial group, contrary to current propaganda.

Columnist BOB WHITAKER Speaks His Mind on Conservatives

If Hitler Hated Jews, Then All Our National Spokesmen Hate Whites

A German Nazi in the 1930s could look you straight in the eye and tell you he didn't hate Jews. Many a Nazi could honestly say that some of his best friends had been Jews.

Nazis did not identify their emotion toward Jews as "hate." They were just acting for the common good. You say this is crazy? Then let us look at WHY you say this is crazy. You say Nazis hated Jews because Nazis said that no place on earth was a good place unless it was "Judenfrei" (free of Jews).

Today you are a racist unless you want EVERY White country to import Asians and Africans and mix with them. You are a racist unless you demand that ONLY White countries import other races and mix with them: "Africa for the Africans, Asia for the Asians."

Unless you are a racist, you demand all that immigration and intermarriage because it will "solve the race problem." But this "race problem" will not be "solved" in Africa or Asia. The "race problem" will be solved when ALL White countries and ONLY White countries are brown.

If you're not a racist, you want a "White free" world. That's not hate, that's Idealism.

The hippies' line was, "The White race is the cancer of history." But absolutely nobody will call that hate. The hippies were Young Idealists.

Harvard Professor Noel Ignatiev put it best: "The goal of abolishing the White race is on its face so desirable that some may find it hard to believe that it could incur any opposition other than from committed White supremacists."

That's not hate, that is what we pay teachers to teach. Another reason you insist that Nazis hated Jews is because Nazis never attributed anything good to Jews, and they blamed all evil things on the Jews. When America landed on the moon, the speech had to say that it was "a great step for Mankind." All the food, medical miracles, and everything else that White people produce is officially the product of "mankind." If you say that "Whites" did anything good, you are a racist.

But the Nazis did give the Jews credit for doing things, bad things. And only a racist today does not give Whites credit for doing every bad thing that ever happened. Whites had slavery. Whites invaded other continents. You know the drill. If you don't know the drill, then you are a racist.

In Nazi Germany, more Jews were turned in by other Jews than by any other group of people. In the world today, Whites are required to lead the charge against Whites. We're all Nazis now. The only thing that has changed is who the Jew is.

O'Reilly Agrees: The Only Point of Integration is to get Rid of Whites

Every respectable conservative agrees with Ignatiev. To prove his respectability, O'Reilly of "The O'Reilly Factor" went ballistic about White Georgia students who held their own prom.

As O'Reilly knows, integration is not about equal educational opportunity. Among liberals the discussion goes straight to interracial sex.

O'Reilly says that if the races don't dance together, it is Evil. He says that since this is called the "United" States, mixed dancing is mandatory. O'Reilly says that American patriotism requires interracial dancing. O'Reilly says that American soldiers died in Iraq for mixed dancing. O'Reilly is a sicko.

How Did O'Reilly Get so Screwed Up?

It took a long, long time for the alcohol and drug recovery experts to admit that alcoholism is hereditary. Social sciences hate heredity, since what they sell is environment.

After all, the more important heredity is, the less education alone can save the world. The more important heredity is, the less psychology can change the world. The more important heredity is, the less sociology determines the future of the world.

Stalin killed most of his geneticists for saying heredity was important. Leftism hates heredity because they want to change the world by their own programs. The more heredity matters, the less leftists can change the world.

O'Reilly was a school teacher. He was raised on education courses that told him that heredity couldn't matter. So he told the audience that nobody can be born with more susceptibility to alcohol than anybody else. However, when identical twins are adopted into different families at birth, they not only tend to commit the same number of crimes, they commit them at the same age and they tend to be the same crimes.

That is because identical twins have the same genes no matter who adopts them. O'Reilly stated flatly that genes don't make people do anything. That is a good line for an education major. That is a good line to make you respectable to liberals. But it makes no sense at all.

O'Reilly is fun to watch and he has guts. But always remember that the only education he ever had was education courses, and, on some issues, he never grew out of it. That is why O'Reilly, who has common sense on any other issue, is such a nut-case integrationist. It is also the reason he is allowed on national television.

Liberals and O'Reilly Must be Enforced Because it Doesn't Work

On one program O'Reilly criticized home schooling because of its lack of "diversity." He then admitted home schooling provided a much better education, but that doesn't matter the way diversity does.

O'Reilly then proceeded to wonder out loud why, while more money is being poured into it, public education keeps getting worse. It might just be because of "diversity."

"Diversity" is bad for real education. Children need to learn their ABCs at that age. They do not need to learn to study with rap music and shouting around them at the same time.

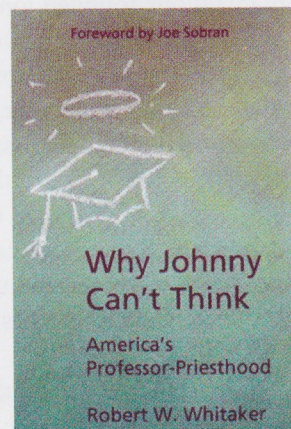

The District of Columbia spends about ten thousand dollars per year per student and its schools are in a state of collapse. This "diversity" nonsense fits into the general pattern of "modern" education. Everything, especially "social adjustment" stuff, is more important than education. That is the main reason public education gets worse and worse with more and more "diversity." O'Reilly normally pushes integration in the name of "equal education." But his having a fit about a separate prom shows he wants integration for its own sake. Your education doesn't include the prom.

One Way to End Freedom is to Trivialize It

O'Reilly and all the respectable conservatives love to bear their chests and shout about how much they love freedom. A person who loves freedom would talk about the fact that all communist countries had to kill people who tried to escape, while we have to keep them out. Conservatives never mention the communist border guards and they only apologize for our need to patrol our own borders. They say our border guard is a regrettable necessity rather than something to be proud of. In other words, the fact that we are a country everybody wants to live in. People want to escape from communist countries mean nothing to respectable conservatives.

So what is this so-called freedom these respectable conservatives are so big on? Conservatives are for any freedom that doesn't seriously offend liberals. Liberals and respectable conservatives trivialize the idea that freedom is a bunch of "ordinary" people doing what they want and getting what they want. In the name of their capitalized freedom they trivialize real freedom. But freedom is a case by case thing, a matter of judgment. It means nothing if you have no right to do anything that others don't like. That is why a country that is full of Third World voters cannot be free.

The Power Struggle within National Socialist Germany

by Shaun Walker,
Chairman, National Alliance

"One People, One Nation, One Leader" was the propaganda drumbeat of Nazi Germany. In fact, there was only one leader, however, the nation, the people, and the NSDAP itself were divided up into competing factions.

The National Socialist (NS) movement in Germany, which officially began in 1919, had much deeper roots in Europe within many organizations founded long prior to Adolf Hitler's rise to power.

These disparate groups had very little to do with each other, but were a major influence on many of the Germans who later would rise to high political office in NS Germany. There were three main categories: the anti-Semitic groups; the Germanic folkish groups; and the Asatru groups¹.

The anti-Semitic groups wanted to rid Germany of Jews. The Germanic folkish groups were also anti-Semitic, not from a political angle, rather from a cultural and biological perspective. They also wanted to change the society of Germany to re-incorporate many of the old traditions into everyday life by implementing a social revolution. The Asatru groups were also folkish, but they were anti-Christian as well. They believed Christianity was a foreign Middle-Eastern religion that when introduced into Europe, had derailed the folkish ways of Germanic antiquity. They wanted to completely rid Europe of Christianity and replace it with the Asatru, which they considered to be the true religion of the Germanic people.

Although all three of these groups had no political power, their ideas received a wide circulation although they always kept out of the mainstream politics. In 1918, most of the Asatru groups were united by Guido von List into a respected group called the Thule society.

As World War One ended, Germany was thrown into turmoil. The Communists, led by the Spartacus League, attempted military coups in Berlin, Bremen, and Munich.

A supporter of the Thule society, named General Franz Ritter von Epp, had, since 1918, formed a paramilitary army called the Freikorps (free corps) which was made up mostly of ex-war veterans who were sympathetic to the ideas of Thule.

General von Epp used his private army to crush the Communist uprising. Since the Communists used the exact same German Army uniform that the Freikorps used, the Freikorps painted the swastika² on the back of the helmets to distinguish the uniforms. This was the origin of the NS movement's use of the swastika. Gen. von Epp made early contact with Hitler after crushing the Spartacus League, but he kept it a secret, as the Army was highly critical of the new nationalist groups which were springing up at that time.

Many of these nationalist groups were just reactionary cliques who only wanted to restore the Kaiser and regain the German borders of 1914. Most of these groups were being spied on by the Army, and a decorated combat veteran³ named Corporal Adolf Hitler was sent to spy on a group called the German Workers Party (DAP) in 1919. However, instead of a reactionary group, Corporal Hitler found there an embryo of a political party which convinced him to leave the Army and start to build up a political movement to implement his own ideas.

Hitler's initial following was mainly the Thule society people⁴, those who made up the Freikorps and a number of ex-war veterans. The DAP was originally just a nationalist organization that also had a folkish platform, which is what attracted Hitler to it in the first place.

The DAP was centered in Bavaria at this stage, but it attracted the attention of the Communists who

considered it a threat because Hitler had adopted many socialist ideas in the party's platform. The first violence occurred in February of 1920, when a Communist started a fight while trying to break up a speech given by Hitler.⁵

After this, the DAP started to attack Communists and break up their meetings. This created the necessity to form a permanent group for protection and for distributing literature on the streets, which were getting increasingly violent. In November of 1921, the SA⁶ was formed to carry out this function, led by Ernst Rohm. This, the SA, would become a major opposition to Hitler within the Nazi movement, but it was also one of the main forces propelling the Nazis into power.

The main reason Hitler became the leader of the DAP was his gifted speaking ability and overwhelming personality. Gregor Strasser told Adolf Wagner that he (Strasser) was under the spell of Hitler's magic⁷ in the early 1920s, but he had gotten over it.

Hitler's leadership and speaking ability launched him to the forefront of the DAP and by mid-1921 he was the undisputed leader, with a small personality cult forming around him. By this time, three of the four main factions which dominated Nazi Germany had already made inroads with Hitler personally. These factions were the Nationalists, represented by many veterans and Hermann Göring; the Hitler cult faction, represented by Rudolf Hess and Martin Bormann; and the newly emerging National-Socialist group, which included the folkish Christians and Asatru element.

Hitler, who was raised a Catholic, was actually an atheist, but he saw many cultural advantages to

Asatru, and since the Christians had had so much influence in German politics for so long, he saw Asatru as a way of getting rid of Christianity (and a major political rival), which he considered to be a universalistic religion, and not organic to the German people.⁸

Then in 1922, Hitler started to actively recruit from the Left in hopes to counter some of the Nationalists within his party, which he saw as getting too powerful. The German Socialist Party, lead by Julius Streicher,⁹ was absorbed into the DAP, as were many other socialist organizations in the North. These included new people such as Dr. Josef Goebbels¹⁰ and Gregor and Otto Strasser.

With these recruits from the Left, the party was renamed the National Socialist German Worker's Party (NSDAP). This Socialist/leftist element made up the forth and final faction of Nazi Germany.

Among the Socialists to enter the party were the environmentalists, whose primary figure was Walther Darre, who later became Hitler's Minister of the Interior. Their ideals worked well with the folkish and Asatru elements, but not the Nationalist faction, which was very much pro-big business, and didn't want nature enthusiasts to dictate to industrialists. The environmentalists were a part of the folkish faction and this aspect was greatly incorporated into the Nazi ideology, so the N.S. faction supported these efforts. This is not to say that only the folkish faction favored the environment: Hermann Göring of the nationalist faction, was also a nature enthusiast who set up a lot of game reserves when in office, and guided the world's first anti-vivisection laws through the East Prussian parliament. The conflict between the nationalists and the environmentalists was also interwoven with personal jealousies, which were quite common in the NSDAP.

Other issues were also common to several factions at once. For example, the socialist Gregor Strasser was against Christianity and Freemasonry because they represented the old established ruling class, but he wasn't particularly enthusiastic about Asatru. The newly converted National Socialists, such as the intellectual Alfred Rosenberg¹¹ disliked Catholics as much as he disliked Jews. He aimed to convert people to Asatru only from a social perspective, as he viewed Christianity as a slave religion. Rosenberg was also responsible more than any other person for creating Nazi-era anti-Slav propaganda.

Goebbels, who hated Rosenberg personally, tried to get Hitler, during the war, to stop the Hitler and the SA (Streicher in civilian clothes). Vital in the road to power, the SA came to represent the Leftist faction within the NSDAP, and Hitler was forced to act against them in the 1934 "Night of the Long Knives."

burning garlic to drive off birds and caterpillars, and scattering poisonous plants, leaves, and shoots into granaries to ward off rats and insects.

Pliny also recorded the use of crushed Cyprus leaves mixed with seeds: this actually gives off hydrocyanic acid, an effective insecticide (the most famous modern example of which is the German-developed Zyklon-B.)

The Slave Economy

Roman society was primarily a slave economy. It is estimated that the slave population of Rome and its immediate surrounding area at the time of Augustus (30 BC) was some 300,000-350,000 out of a total population of about 900,000-950,000. For all of Italy, the figure is approximately the same. A figure of around two million slaves out of a population of about six million at the time of Augustus is accurate – this means that at this early stage one in every three persons in Rome and Italy was a slave.

The importation of these racially alien slaves changed the demographics of Rome, and ultimately led to its downfall.

One example of a development in Roman Gaul which was deliberately suppressed as a result of the Roman fear of a slave uprising, was the vallus, a reaping machine as described by the historian Pliny in 77 AD: "On the vast estates in the provinces of Gaul very large frames fitted with teeth at the edge and carried on two wheels are driven through the corn by a donkey pushing from behind; the ears of corn fall into the frame."

Despite the obvious benefits of this successful mechanical reaper – modern reapers use exactly the same principle - this invention failed to be adopted throughout the Empire. The reason for this was simple: slaves. The Roman slave economy meant that the Roman estates were always inhabited by vast numbers of slaves, and the danger of social upheaval was therefore always present, a problem which could easily have become worse if slaves suddenly found themselves being replaced en masse by machines. Accordingly the reaper fell out of use.

The Lesson of Rome

In many ways, the greatness of Rome mirrors that of modern Western Civilization: technologically advanced, yet seemingly blind to the reality of race. People considering how the Romans, as advanced as they were, could have come to a fall, need only ask themselves of modern Western Civilization: how is it that a race which can produce the computer and cell phone, simultaneously be blind to the racial realities which surround them?

How can a race which has put men on the moon, possibly consider themselves the equal of Congo pygmies who have never invented the wheel?

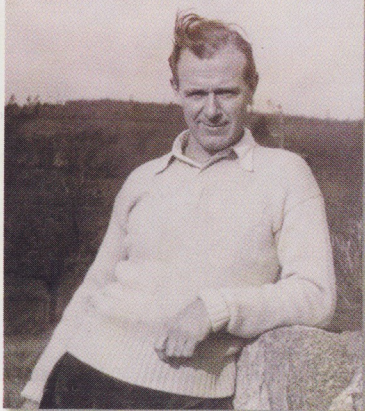

If the ancient Romans could talk, they might have an opinion on this topic.

SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

Which Way Western Man?

William Gayley Simpson

William Gayley Simpson spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book: that the single, undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man.

In support of this thesis, he looks at the foundations of Western society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the roles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility for to the future.

WHAT WE BELIEVE:

A Natural Order

We see ourselves as part of nature, subject to Nature's law. Within the scope of these laws, we are able to determine our own destiny.

We are responsible for everything over which we have the power of choice: in particular, for the state of our environment and for the destiny of our race.

The Law of Inequality

We recognize the inequalities which arise as natural consequences of the evolutionary process and which are essential to progress in every sphere of life.

Different races evolved under different circumstances, and Nature has endowed each race with different characteristics.

We believe that our race is highly developed at planning, self-discipline, has higher mental faculties – including the abilities to conceptualize, to solve problems and to plan for the future, as opposed to other races.

This does not imply that we look down or despise other races. It merely means that we acknowledge and bow to Nature's decision in allocating different abilities to different races. As a result, we believe that races vary greatly in their capabilities to build and to sustain societies.

A Hierarchy of Responsibilities

We are obligated by Nature to participate as effectively as we can in its eternal quest for higher levels of development, higher forms of life.

We have a special obligation to our own race: to ensure its survival, to safeguard its unique characteristics, and to improve its quality. Our acceptance of this hierarchy of responsibilities is in contrast to the attitude of the individualists, who recognize no responsibility except to themselves; and to humanists who eschew their racial responsibility.

A White Living Space

We must have our own living and breeding area. The sickness of "multiculturalism" must be swept away, we must again have a racially clean area of the earth for further development of our people. We must have White schools, White residential neighborhoods, and recreational areas, White workplaces, White farms and countryside. The long-term demographic trend toward a darker world, which the disastrous policies of the last century have caused, must not only be halted; it must be reversed.

A New Educational System

We want an educational system which will properly serve to pass our people's cultural, intellectual, and spiritual heritage from generation to generation; to teach skills and techniques; and to guide the character development of individuals from childhood to adulthood.

It must pass on a consciousness of our European heritage to instill a patriotic race consciousness in all future generations, to ensure that the value and worth of race is held paramount.

An Economic Policy Based on Racial Principles

We need an economic system which, in contrast to Marxism, allows individuals to succeed in proportion to their capability and energy, but which, in contrast to laissez-faire capitalism, does not allow them to engage in socially or racially harmful activity, such as stifling competition or importing non-White labor. The ultimate aim of all economic policy is racial progress.

A White Society

We must have new societies throughout the White world, which are based on White values and are compatible with our White nature. There will be room for Germanic societies, Celtic societies, Slavic societies, and so on, each with its own roots, traditions, and language.

A Responsible Government

We must have a government wholly committed to the service of our race and subject to no non-Aryan influence.

The central task of a new government will be to reverse the racially devolutionary course of the last few millennia and keep it reversed: a long-term eugenics program involving at least the entire populations of Europe and America.

anti-Slav propaganda,¹² as it was counterproductive to the millions of Slavs that were living in German occupied Eastern Europe. This was an ideological rift, as Rosenberg was a nationalist and a Nordicist¹³ while Goebbels was a racist. Hitler, who in the beginning, was very much a nationalist, later becomes a racist (White racist) and was opposed to the anti-Slav propaganda.

This last point is a good example of the major contradictions in Hitler's program. On the one hand, he wanted to unify the German people in one nation without class barriers, but on the other hand, he wished to create a folkish, neo-Asatru social revolution.

These two aims were in conflict with each other. The Nordicists divided the country on biological lines, and the north of Germany, which is more Teutonic, started to consider themselves superior to the south, which is more of the Alpine stock.

Hitler did not allow the Nordicist propaganda to dominate, as it was directly working against his attempt to unify Germany as one folk.¹⁴ Hitler, ever the politician, did not however suppress the Nordicist Asatrus. This was not because they were one of his most loyal supporting groups, but because he needed them to offset the power of the Nationalist faction.

In November of 1923, the Nationalist faction convinced Hitler that the army was really on his side, and that they would not oppose a coup attempt. This prediction turned out to be quite wrong, and Hitler went to prison for a year as a result of the failed but famous "Beer Hall Putsch."

While Hitler was in prison, the party's momentum was lost, and it started to splinter into regional factions. With Hitler in prison, the party's regional leaders, the Gauleiters, created their own political platforms which often conflicted with those of the other Gauleiters.

In 1924, after Hitler was released, the SA, led by Ernst Rohm was the most powerful faction. Hitler tried to offset this by organizing a newly created unit called the SS,¹⁵ but this posed a threat to the SA, so the SS stayed at around 250 people until 1927. The Strasser brothers in the north with their anti-bourgeois, anti-capitalistic socialism, were too far to the left for Hitler, but he didn't want to drive them away.

Instead, he maneuvered to contain them. In 1925, Hitler, in a roundabout way, fired Ernst Rohm and reorganized the SA. By 1926 he gained control of the North, so he was able to shift his platform away from the Socialists back towards the Nationalists. By this time, Hitler was getting more people who were National Socialists, which is what he wanted. He was mixing the two factions, and trying to produce a new hybrid ideology.

The north of Germany, which was Protestant, mostly Lutheran, was a much more radical group, and although they provided plenty of street fighters, they produced very little money. The Nationalist faction, lead mostly by Hermann Göring and Wilhelm Frick,¹⁶ didn't recruit many people directly, but they provided the connections to the old royal families and the rich industrialists. Göring wasn't part of the royalty, but he was pretty close. His father had been the governor of German South-West Africa (present day Namibia) and Göring, had, since his youth, had royal friends. Prince August-Wilhelm, a Hohenzollern aristocrat, was an early recruit into the party, as was the popular war hero General Erich von Ludendorff. Both were recruited by Hermann Göring. These Nationalists had very little in common with what the average SA man with regards to a social revolution, but they provided Hitler with the one thing he unquestionably needed: money.

The ideology of National Socialism was starting to take root by 1928, and Hitler had brought in some more Nationalists to offset the Socialists. The Asatru faction wasn't growing, and they were put on the back burner until power was attained. Joseph Goebbels had taken over the Gau of Berlin, and he had a way of linking socialist reforms into the National Socialist ideology, and created some of the most emotionally stirring propaganda yet seen. By this time, the Nazis were overcoming their growing pains. In 1929, Hitler put Heinrich Himmler in charge of the SS and let it grow, but this was seen as a major competing faction to the SA. Himmler, who was part of the Asatru faction, wanted to push that religion, but Hitler forbid him until power was obtained. By 1931, the SS numbered 10,000 men, and by 1933, they had 52,000 men. But by then, the problems of unifying Germany were just a dream. The SS got most of the recruits from the South and the West, the SA got theirs from the North and East. Hitler didn't want this news to get out because it would show how deeply ingrained were cultural differences amongst Germans.¹⁷

The rift in the NSDAP had grown to critical proportions by 1930. Otto Strasser considered Hitler to be a passive right-winger that had "legality hang-ups."¹⁸ The SA was almost in full rebellion against Hitler and he couldn't swing to the Nationalist side just yet, even though they now started to get a lot of recruits from the Nationalists. Captain Steinnes, who was the leader of the SA at that time, was a threat to Hitler, so Hitler declared the SA to be fully under his control and fired Steinnes in 1931. Then Hitler convinced Ernst Rohm, who was in Bolivia, to return and re-take control of the SA, which he did.

Steinnes and Otto Strasser then formed their own Nazi splinter group called the National Socialist Fighters Movement (NSKB). The Socialist faction was being watered down with so many new recruits, many from the center-right nationalist, but Hitler refused to be swayed by the Nationalists, as he remembered the Beer Hall Putsch disaster of 1923.

After Hitler was elected in 1933, he wasted no time to dissolving all opposition. He simply outlawed the Communists and the remaining Nationalists were absorbed into the SA using various methods. The SS had a new sub-group created in 1933: 120 men lead by Sepp Dietrich, a die-hard National Socialist, politically stemming from the folkish faction. This later became the Waffen-SS. Hitler then allowed Himmler free reign with the SS, and had the SS establish a secret police force called the Gestapo¹⁹ in 1934. In 1936, Himmler consolidated all the police agencies in the country under the Gestapo.

The SS was then a truly revolutionary institute, as it operated completely outside the jurisdiction of the German laws. A police force was even created within the SS to oversee that organization, called the SD,²⁰ which in turn was led by Reinhard Heydrich.²¹

In 1934, the "Night of the Long Knives" took place. Hitler had been given false information by Göring and Himmler, who wanted to eliminate Rohm as a political rival, and consolidate the leftist faction within the now NSDAP-controlled German government institutions.

Hitler ordered about 70 people to be shot. The Army, lead by the Nationalist faction, used this as an excuse to execute far more, and by the end of the event some 1,700 people were executed. Heydrich personally shot Gregor Strasser, who had been kicked out of the NSDAP in 1932. The "Night of the Long Knives" was actually infighting within the NSDAP between the leftist social revolutionaries and the rest of the party.

After 1934, the Army's power grew exponentially, as did the industrialists. Hermann Göring became increasingly important, so Hitler elevated him to the number two position, leapfrogging the previous second in command, Rudolf Hess, who became the number three man in the party leadership.

With the removal of Ernst Rohm, and the consolidation of the trade unions into "the Labor Front" lead by Robert Ley, the Socialist faction had no real representative left in the top party circles apart from Josef Goebbels. But, the Nazi economic reforms worked well beyond all expectations, and Goebbels was so loyal to Hitler, that the "Second Revolution" as it was called, the Socialist NSDAP revolution, never came to pass.

In this regard it is of interest to note that the NSDAP “25 Points” or policy manifesto, contained a number of radical socialist points which were in fact never implemented. Point 17 of the NSDAP manifesto, for example, called for “. . .land reform suitable to our national requirements, the passing of a law for the expropriation of land for communal purposes without compensation; the abolition of ground rent, and the prohibition of all speculation in land.”

The blatantly socialist nature of this claim – and the fact that none of the points were implemented, caused Hitler to add the following explanation to the “25 Points” in 1928: “Regarding the false interpretations of Point 17 of the program of the NSDAP on the part of our opponents, the following definition is necessary: Since the NSDAP stands on the platform of private ownership, it happens that the passage concerns only the creation of legal opportunities to expropriate if necessary, land which has been illegally acquired or is not administered from the viewpoint of the national welfare. This is directed primarily against the Jewish land-speculation companies.”

By claiming that it was meant only for Jews, the NSDAP managed to sidestep the clearly socialist demand for the nationalization of land.

All this is not to say that there was no real economic reform, but it is true to say that the rich traditional elite were unaffected by the NSDAP’s assumption of power. Since the Nazis gained power and slowly took over every aspect of the German government, the Nationalist faction, (the royalty/aristocracy, army and industrialist) became the most powerful group. To offset this, Hitler allowed the Asatru faction, via the SS, to grow and granted them all kinds of special privileges. The SS was a lot smaller, but they became extremely powerful, and a major rift between the Army and the SS formed, which later turned into open hatred.

Himmler had transformed the SS into an elitist,²² Teutonic Asatru society that held secret and public Asatru rituals, practiced rune magic, and did extensive research into Asatru²³ and the ancient Germanic tribes, as well as greatly expanding the eugenics and racial aspects of Nazi Germany. The SS had many professionals such as medical doctors, scientists, some industrialists, and royalty, but Hitler still saw them as clearly an elitist group who stood in the way of a single classless society. The SS even expanded into heavy industry, and created a vast economic empire within Germany, a state within a state. The SS, for example, had a virtual monopoly on the production of spring water in Germany right up to 1945.

Although many of the SS were not part of the Hitler cult faction, they were, ideologically, the true National Socialists who Hitler and Himmler both considered as the future leaders of Germany.

By 1939, many of the rich elite who feared the NSDAP was going too far and would end their elitist lifestyle, began to side heavily with Göring’s nationalist faction.

Hitler countered this by expanding the powers of the NSDAP party secretary,²⁴ whose authority became vast. The Army had also grown large, but they were not directed by the Nazi Party, and many of the officers considered the NSDAP to be intrusive, and resented a political party dictating to them.

Many of these officers wanted the Army to be the absolute ruler of Germany, and the resentment against social reforms and Dr. Goebbels grew immense. To counter this, Hitler had the SS expand its own army, created by Sepp Dietrich and called the Waffen SS. By 1944 the SS had almost one million men in it (of whom 600,000 were non-Germans from 32 nationalities. The Ukrainians, although Slavs, comprised the single largest with over 100,000 men and women). As such, the SS became much more of a pan-European racist organization and more folkish, with less of an elitist emphasis.

Herman Göring, reviewing Luftwaffe recruits in Vienna. A member of Germany’s social elite, he came to represent the nationalist faction within the NSDAP, although he remained more loyal to Hitler than did the German Army nationalists.

After the massive treason in 1943, when Field Marshal Paulus surrendered to the Soviets at Stalingrad, the Gestapo uncovered massive evidence that the German Army was disloyal to Hitler and the NSDAP. Hitler, however, still needed them, and could not afford a purge at that stage. Instead, he divided them, setting things up in a way so that only he (Hitler) was privy to all the military's activity. At this point Hitler greatly admired Stalin's 1941 purge of the Soviet Army, and he expressed an interest in doing the same to the German Army.²⁵

Then in July of 1944, a group of army officers, practically all stemming from the rich Junker class, tried to assassinate Hitler by placing a bomb in the Führer's command complex. Simultaneously they attempted to carry out a coup in Germany.

The SS in Berlin, however, remained loyal and played a leading role in squashing the coup, which greatly elevated their status. Göring was not implicated in the plot, but Goebbels, Bormann, and Himmler suspected that the Luftwaffe leader had some foreknowledge of the coup.

Hitler then said, referring to the "Night of the Long Knives" that he had stuffed the wrong pig. The leftist faction was loyal to Hitler and the revolution, the rightist Nationalists were his real opposition. Hitler discovered this error on his part too late: the war was by this stage lost.

Famously, Göring tried to usurp Hitler in late April 1945 when the Führer was in the Berlin bunker. He, however, underestimated Hitler's power, even from below the bombed ruins of the Chancellery: Göring was fired and Himmler put in the number two position in his place. However, Himmler had also tried to open secret negotiations with the Western Allies through the Swedes, and when Hitler found this out he ordered Himmler's dismissal and arrest. The latter, of course, never happened, as by then Germany was well and truly beaten. Hitler's will named Grand Admiral Karl Dönitz as new leader. Admiral Dönitz was very loyal to Hitler and the NSDAP, even to his death in 1980. He, however, had no choice but to order Germany's surrender on the 8th May 1945. The days of the NSDAP were at last at an end. ☘

Foreign Aid to Africa: The Black Hole

Jokers have remarked that sub-Saharan Africa has one of the most advanced space exploration programs in the world: the phenomenon known as a 'Black Hole' in space terms, actually exists on earth - in Africa - a void which sucks everything in where it vanishes without trace.

Cynical this joke may be, yet it remains an accurate reflection of the truth. Between 1980 and 2002, the World Bank's International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and International Development Association, along with the African Development Bank, have provided nearly $1.5 billion in aid to each and every of the 48 countries in sub-Saharan Africa. This is a huge investment, particularly when the relatively small sizes of the recipient countries' economies are taken into account.

The total GDP for all of Sub-Saharan Africa in 2004 was US$ 545bn, according to the International Monetary Fund. Contrast this to the GDP of the tiny European country of Belgium, which was US$ 302.2bn.

And to make matters worse, if one excludes oil rich Nigeria and South Africa from the African figures, the continent's GDP drops to US$ 336bn.

Despite this massive foreign aid (often at extremely subsidized interest rates and generous repayment schedules), sub-Saharan Africa has performed dismally. Of the 45 sub-Saharan African countries for which per capita GDP data are available from 1980 to 2002:

- Twenty-three experienced negative compound annual growth in real per capita GDP.
- Seven experienced marginal compound annual growth between 0 percent and 1 percent in real per capita GDP.
- Fifteen experienced compound annual growth of more than 1 percent in real per capita GDP, but only three achieved per capita growth over 4 percent.

• The World Bank estimated that halving severe poverty in sub-Saharan Africa by 2015 (a target of the United Nations' Millennium Development Goals [MDG]) would require annual growth of at least 7 percent.

Yet more foreign aid arrives in Africa - crashing both literally and figuratively.

• Sub-Saharan Africa is the only region of the world that is not on track to meet a single target of the Millennium Development Goals—including the goals to reduce poverty, hunger, and infant mortality, or to improve secondary school enrollment for girls, immunization for measles, and access to potable water.

• Over the last 43 years, some $568 billion (in today's dollars) has been given to Africa: a fraction of that should have been sufficient to control malaria in Africa, yet that disease remains one of the continent's biggest killers.

• Equally, a tiny amount of that would have been sufficient to provide clean drinking water for the entire continent. Africa has been unable to provide for even the most basic of its human needs.

• Approximately a fifth of US aid to Africa between 1957 and 1995 was provided to Zaire, the Sudan, Somalia, and Liberia. This aid was wasted from a developmental perspective. When Zaire (now called the Democratic Republic of the Congo) became independent in early 1960, it possessed 37,284 miles of asphalt roads. Today it has less than 5,592 miles of asphalt roads left.

• The World Bank has reported that "Econometric analyses show that aid has no systematic relationship to growth anywhere in the world. This may not be surprising in countries where aid is small relative to the size of the economy. It is surprising and concerning in Africa—where aid flows have consistently reached 10% or more of gross national product in many countries over an extended period of time." (World Bank, "Aid Effectiveness: The Problem of Africa", 1999).

White Backlash Starts: Street Protests Erupt Against Reconquistada

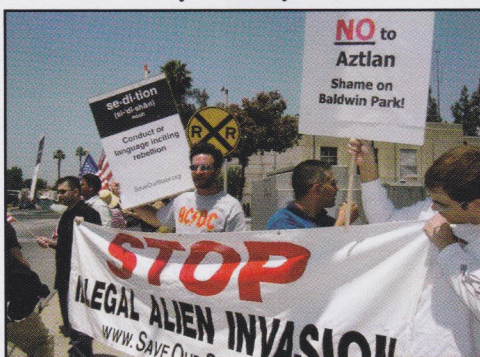

The blatant invasion of America by hordes of illegal immigrants from Mexico and Latin America is at last driving White Americans into reaction – with the surest sign being a street protest organized by a kosher conservative group protesting the Mexicanization of California leading to a major street confrontation.

The group, 'Save Our State' (SOS), has done its best to avoid being called 'racist' (founder Joseph Turner claims to have Hispanic family) but members are quickly learning the hard way that as soon as one objects to the destruction of America, one is instantly attacked as a 'racist.' This learning curve aside, SOS organized a protest against a taxpayer funded piece of "art" near the metrolink station at Baldwin Park, southern California, which contained an engraving stating that America was better before the Whites arrived. The SOS protestors were met by a counter demonstration of Mexicans who hurled abuse and trash at the Whites. Much publicity was gained and more protests are planned. The importance of this development is far greater than merely a protest meeting: for the first time, the urgency of the impending racial disaster has started to penetrate into broader America.

This awakening presents the greatest opportunity yet for the National Alliance to spread its message and provide leadership at this critical stage in our race's history.

Right: The attitude of the Mexican protestors can be seen from this poster. Below: A view of the SOS protestors finding out the hard way that they too, are "racists."

Foreign Aid to Africa: The Black Hole

- When the impoverished country of Malawi got its annual aid grant of $94 million from Britain recently, the government's first act was to spend $3 million of it to buy 39 brand new S-class Mercedes automobiles for its cabinet ministers.
- Canadian aid paid to build a new international airport in the remote town of El Dorat in Kenya. The only plane that used it was that of then Kenyan President Arap Moi, whose hometown is nearby.
- The EU famously funded a salt mine in Uganda. No-one lives there, and no salt was ever mined.
- Under the late President Mobutu Sese Seko, Zaire got nine loans from the World Bank - with Western approval - despite an abysmal economic record. He personally pocketed the vast majority of it, hiring the Concorde to fly his wife and family to Paris for shopping trips, amongst other documented excesses.
- Some $2 billion was given to build roads in Tanzania - a project which is now, famously, in disrepair. Tanzania currently receives about $140 million in aid every year.
- The majority of the 49 least developed counties are in Africa. Most of their people are unskilled and lack access to medical care and healthy nutrition. 290 million Africans (more than the entire official U.S. population) live on less than a dollar a day.

- A recent study by Shell reported that two-thirds of its development and humanitarian assistance projects in the oil-producing region of Nigeria were unsuccessful.
- Africa is wracked by extreme poverty, overpopulation, under-education, environmental degradation, disease, civil disorder, and crumbling public infrastructure. The very fact that these problems have persisted and in many respects actually worsened despite 50 years of foreign aid is prima facie evidence that such aid has been a waste.

* Talking of Space Programs: India is also a recipient of British foreign aid, to the tune of $180 million per year, which makes India the major recipient of British bilateral aid. This aid is supposed to go on helping the poorest – but cynics point out that India has its own nuclear weapons and recently launched its own satellite. Observers have to ask what on earth Britain is doing subsidizing a country which has its own satellite program – something that not even the UK has? ☸

Netherlands

Dutch 'National Alliance' Aims to Contest Elections

The Dutch "Nationale Alliantie" (no relation to our National Alliance) party, which was founded in November 2003, has released its manifesto in preparation to take part in Dutch elections.

Left: Jan Teijn, in black, chairman of the Nationale Alliantie, takes part in the flag parade at the annual inter-European nationalist Ijzerwake in 2004. Right: Virginia Kapic, party secretary, who has allegedly committed the worst crime of all: pointing out the Jewish control of the media and dismissing the Holocaust as a lie.

Led by its dynamic chairman, Jan Teijn (who won a seat on the Rotterdam city council for an earlier pro-White party, and who was secretary of the well known CP '86 party until it was banned in 1998 by the democrats in the Netherlands), the Nationale Alliantie's program of principles includes a call for the repatriation of "criminal non-Whites" from the Netherlands and measures to increase the native White population.

"All peoples are unique and from our perspective it is wrong to mix with other peoples to become a raceless mixture," the NA program says. "According to the demographic figures, by 2050 the Dutch population will be a minority in this country. This has to do with the large number of abortions and low birth rate... and a growth in the non-White population," reads the manifesto.

"Currently, the numbers of non-Whites in our society stands at around eight percent. According to projections, this will rise to 14 percent by 2015, and 20 percent before 2030. The Rotterdam Centre for Research has calculated that by 2017, some 57 percent of the residents of that city will be non-White. We do not want a multicultural society, we aim to stop immigration and deport criminal non-Whites."

* The Nationale Alliantie has also attracted criticism by appointing Virginia Kapic as party secretary. Kapic has been accused by the leftist media of the worst crime: "anti-Semitism" because she allegedly wrote on an Internet forum about Jewish control of the media.

Norway

Oslo City Spots 'Want To Be White'

Oslo's bars, restaurants and clubs want a "White" image and discrimination against non-Whites is a "widespread problem" – according to a recent report in the Norwegian newspaper Dagsavisen. The "scandal" of Norwegians wanting to remain Norwegian erupted after a security firm lost a contract to provide bouncers for the 'Scotsman' bar and restaurant in downtown Oslo – because they supplied Pakistani bouncers. The owners of the bar told the security company that the Pakistanis were making the "place look like an asylum seeker reception" said the Dagsavisen. The paper continued: "(T)his story is heard regularly about Oslo's nightlife spots, often from potential guests who feel they are barred because of their ethnic origin." Many restaurants and bars think like this, commented the Norwegian 'Center for Combating Ethnic Discrimination' (SMED).

Poland

Jew Co-Producer of 'Schindler's List' Imprisoned For Bribery

The Jew co-producer of Schindler's List, Lew Rywin has been sentenced to two years in prison in Poland for his role in a bribery scandal. Rywin was convicted of approaching the publishers of a leading newspaper in 2002 to solicit a US$17.5 million bribe. In exchange, he allegedly offered to lobby for changes to a proposed media law that would have allowed the newspaper's publisher to buy a nationwide broadcaster.

The court said Rywin claimed to represent Leszek Miller, prime minister at the time, and some unspecified "group holding power." Rywin, was found guilty in December 2004 of being an accessory to the charge of "influence peddling" in Warsaw, but appealed against his imprisonment on health grounds. The appeal was rejected six months later.

Great Britain

BRITISH PATRIOTS ON TRIAL FOR "THOUGHT CRIMES"

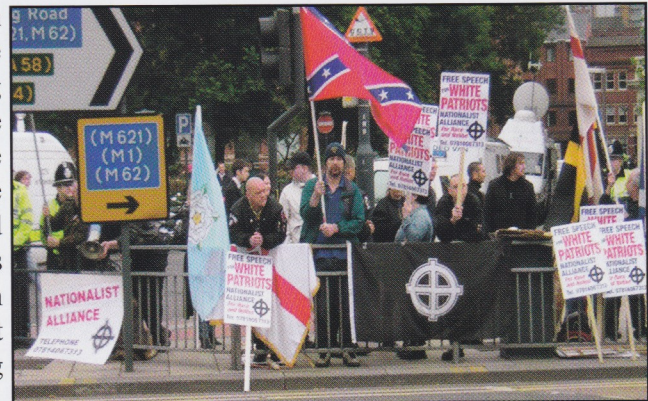

John Tyndall and Nick Griffin, the founder and current leader respectively of the British National Party, have been formally charged with incitement to racial hatred under that country's infamous Race Relations Act.

Both men, and a third leading BNP activist, Mark Collett, were charged in June this year with "using words or behavior intended or likely to stir up racial hatred." Under this "democratic" law, truth is not a defense: it does not matter if what the men said was factually correct, what counts is if they said it with the intention of "stirring racial hatred" according to this law.

If found guilty, all the men could face up to seven years in jail.

The appearance of the defendants in the Leeds Magistrates Court drew crowds of supporters, divided into two camps, those supporting Griffin and those supporting Tyndall, as the political divide between the populists and overt racists has split the British nationalist movement along those lines.

The "Nationalist Alliance" (no relation to the National Alliance) which supports Tyndall, put on an impressive display of flags and banners, including a prominent Confederate flag.

Angolan Immigrants Bring 'Witchcraft' To UK

The UK has been rocked by a number of court cases involving Black African witchcraft rituals – which routinely include murder and the sale of body parts. 1 in 3 Deaths: AIDS Is The 'Leading Killer' In South Africa

South Africa's Medical Research Council announced in May 2005 that one in three deaths in that country are caused by AIDS, making it the single

Denmark's Strict Immigration Laws Catch 6000 Fake Marriages

In 2002 Denmark's populist conservative government tightened that country's immigration laws, and as a result, each year since then, about 3,000 marriages involving Danes and non-EU nationals have been dismissed as "invalid" and the 'non-EU national' – almost always a Third Worlder – has been refused permission to settle in Denmark, the Deutsche Welle news service has reported.

Spain: Racial Unrest After Non-White Murders White Youth

Thousands of people demonstrated in a Madrid suburb in May after a non-White immigrant from the Dominican Republic stabbed to death a Spaniard, a killing that sparked an outbreak of racial violence. Madrid television reported that the family of the killer fled their home fearing reprisals. Television reports showed anti-immigrant graffiti, including a swastika, in the stairwells of nearby flats.

* Almost 700,000 immigrants have applied for work and residence permits in Spain under the largest amnesty for illegal aliens ever undertaken in Europe.

Left Wing French Government Announces Anti-illegal Immigration Measures

The left wing French government has announced new measures designed to tackle illegal immigration, including the introduction of visas with biometric information, as well as an increase in expulsions. The measures will also include the creation of an immigration police and an end to the automatic recognition of marriages entered into by French nationals abroad. The government has, however, ruled out the possibility that France would follow Spain's recent decision to grant an amnesty to hundreds of thousands of immigrants. "Previous mass amnesties in 1981 and 1997 were total failures. Each time it created new pressure and new arrivals," interior minister Dominique de Villepin told Le Figaro newspaper.

WHITE CONSERVANCY

Riley glanced down at the odometer, then at the hand drawn map that the attorney had given him and decided that the unmarked dirt road coming up on his left must be the one that would go up the holler to his grandfathers property.

The attorney had written to Riley a couple of weeks earlier and informed him of his grandfather's death. Riley had met his father's father only a couple of times, and could barely remember him.

The dirt road was tortuous, and Riley put the rental car in low gear as he started up the narrow twisting ruts. It was October and the mountains were a psychedelic collage of color. Riley remembered coming up here with his father one summer and how green and otherworldly it all seemed.

The estate he had inherited was one hundred and sixty acres of almost inaccessible mountains and a one room cabin without electricity or running water. There was no money in the estate. The property was about fifty miles from Beckley, West Virginia; too steep to farm, too remote to develop, and in the only state in America that was losing population. Riley had just broken up with the girl he had lived with for the previous two years and had quit his job, so getting away from it all seemed like a good idea.

When Riley asked the Buckley attorney where his grandfather was buried, the attorney had told him to ask Thearl about it. The attorney explained that Thearl was a neighbor who had taken care of Grandpa Langhorne when the old man got too stove up to care for himself.

The road ended in front of the cabin. A man was sitting on the porch; there were no chairs. He was sitting on the porch with his legs dangling over the edge. He was big, with a full, bushy beard, long wild hair, and he was wearing bib overalls over a faded flannel shirt. When Riley got out of the car the big guy stood up, smiled, stuck his hand out and said, "You must be Riley. I'm Thearl."

Thearl led Riley over to the hand pump, primed it, and pumped while Riley drank from the spout. When they came back and sat on the edge of the porch Riley said, "The attorney told me you took care of Grandpa the last few years. Thank you for that. I guess I shoulda been here but..."

Thearl: "You don't have to thank me. Hell, I loved that old man. Your Granddaddy was one cool dude."

Riley: "Where's he buried?"

Thearl: "If you're up for a little walk, I'll show ya."

They walked around to the back of the cabin and when they passed the outhouse Riley laughed and said, "I remember this. I was afraid to go in there. I stuck my head in the door and saw that deep, dark, stinking hole and went and took a leak behind a tree. I think it was the summer I turned ten."

They followed an old overgrown logging road up to the ridge line where the walking became easier and the view opened up. It seemed as if trees of every color covered the mountains for miles around.

Thearl: "This ridge is the property line between your Granddaddy's property and mine. My cabin is right down there. You can't see it from here, but it's there. I said your Granddaddy's property' I guess I mean your property now."

Thearl told Riley stories about his Granddaddy, and Riley was fascinated by the stories and by Thearl's soft, deep voice. His slight southern accent seemed to wrap around the words. At first glance, Riley had thought Thearl was older than him, but he soon realized that they were about the same age, mid twenties. Thearl's hard core hillbilly aura, and his look of lapsed maintenance made him seem older. They came to an outcropping of granite where shear-faced rock shot up forming narrow passageways. They wound their way through the rock maze and came out on a small grassy knoll. At the highest point of the grassy rise was a slab of stone four feet tall with crudely chiseled lettering: Barden Luther Langhorne 1916-2004. They stood before the headstone in silence listening to the wind for a few minutes before Riley said, "This is beautiful. But how'd you get him up here?"

Thearl laughed and said, "Well, let me tell ya, it weren't easy. And it involved a sled."

Riley: "Is this legal? To bury someone like this?"

Thearl: "I never thought about it that way. We were up here huntin a few years ago and came across this spot and he just set down and said, Thearl when the time comes I want ya to bury me right chere. And I said okay, so here he is."

Riley: "Well you sure did right by him."

Thearl: "What are you gonna do with your land?"

Riley: "I don't know. I'd like to try living up here but I don't know how I could get by. I just broke up with my girlfriend, quit my job, my neighborhood has gone to hell..." There was a small silence that could have been awkward but Thearl said, "You can survive up here. You'll never have any money, but you can get by, I do. And I'd be glad to show you some of the things your Granddaddy showed me. Like this, looky here, Ginseng."

Thearl pointed to a small weed with his boot toe. There was a hard silence as they each waited for the other to say something. Finally Thearl said, "The root sells for about four hundred dollars a pound."

Riley: "No way!" Thearl bent down and pulled up the plant.

"We might as well take it. People roam the mountains looking for this stuff. This land will support you if you're willin to do a little work. That weed patch between the cabin and the outhouse is where the garden used to be, you can grow all kinds of stuff up here. I'll show you where there's a little coal seam where you can get coal for heat. If you like venison this area is lousy with deer."

Thearl walked off trail a way, picked a mushroom the size of his hand and said, "This dry land fish will go good with dinner tonight. Yeah, a lot of people get by up here, you'll see."

That night Riley drove down to the hard road where Thearl was waiting for him. Thearl's twenty year old F-250 was rugged looking with big tires, a small rebel flag decal in one of the upper corners of the cracked windshield, and a NASCAR sticker on the rear bumper. Riley climbed up into the truck, and they started for Bridey Mae Toliver's house for the weekly porch party. Thearl explained that Bridey Mae's husband had been busted by the ATF for making moonshine, and while the agents were searching the property, they found some of Bridey Mae's son's marijuana plants. So father and son were both in the state prison.

Some of the locals had started going to her house on Saturday nights to party and to leave a little donation in the bucket by the door while they were there. After a twenty minute drive, they pulled up to a mobile home with a front porch add-on. There was a car engine hanging from a tree limb and about a dozen cars and trucks scattered around the yard. Two guys on ATV's came out of the woods and parked by an old tobacco shed. There were a few people sitting in cars and on tailgates. Others milled around in the yard and on the porch.

As Thearl and Riley walked toward the porch, Riley noticed that although several of the guys had that Hillbilly Hellion look like Thearl, most of the guys and girls looked like young people you would see in any mall in America. However, there were no baggy clothes and no backward hats. Everyone seemed to know Thearl, and they were calling out his name. He smiled and waved to everyone, and said to Riley, "Come on in and I'll introduce you to Bridey Mae."

Riley was spellbound by the hauntingly beautiful Bluegrass music being performed by a small group on the porch. There was a banjo, a mandolin, and a fiddle, but no guitars and no drums. A black-haired girl with blue eyes was singing a high keening love song that cut right to the bone. Beside the front door was a five gallon white plastic bucket with crumpled bills covering the bottom. Inside were several young people and one lady in her fifties who was working in the kitchen.

Thearl: "Bridey Mae, I want you to meet Riley Langhorne."

Bridey Mae wiped her hands on her apron and said, "Riley Langhorne! Well, welcome home boy." She surprised Riley by taking him by the shoulders, pulling him to her, and giving him a big hug. Bridey Mae: "I sure miss that Grandpa Langhorne, he was one straight shootin mountain man. I knew and respected him all my life. If you're anything like him, hit's gonna be a pleasure havin you around."

She pulled Riley over to the stove, cracked the oven door open, and said, "Smell that." Riley leaned forward, took a big smell, and smiled.

Bridey Mae: "Fresh baked bread. Now you be sure and get something to eat before the night's over, and don't wait too long or it'll all be gone. These kids eat like animals around here, I swear I don't know what makes them so hungry." But the twinkle in her eye implied that she knew exactly what made them so hungry.

Bridey Mae kept chattering away to Riley and ten minutes later he wandered outside to look for Thearl.

Riley: "Thearl, that Bridey Mae knows more about my family tree than I do."

Thearl: "Yeah, you'll get a lot of that around here."

And sure enough every time Thearl introduced Riley to someone that person would say something like, "You must be Grandpa Langhorne's grandson. One of my own born cousins was related to your dad's sister who was a grass widow from ..." and end up making some long convoluted connection that resulted in Riley and the person being distantly related. It was a very endearing quality and one that established an instant bond.

Thearl handed Riley a mason jar with a couple of inches of clear liquid in it and said, "You ever drunk moonshine?"

Riley: "No, but I've heard a lot about it," and he took a swig. It was like vodka's angry stepchild, like a flamethrower down his throat. It took his breath away and made his eyes water. He liked it.

They were standing in the yard under a full moon sipping shine with Bluegrass music in the background listening to Thearl's friends and Riley's new consanguineous kinfolk swap lies when a Jeep pulled into the yard. It was a new blue CJ5 Appalachian Trails model Wrangler. There were two girls in the front seats, and they looked like well-fed voluptuous models. The driver stepped out wearing bib overalls with a tube top underneath and one of the shoulder straps to the overalls unsnapped and hanging down. She was wearing Birkenstocks and had on a gold necklace that featured the word "Redneck" in gold with diamonds. She was gorgeous, but Riley was the only one open-mouthed and staring. To everyone else, she was just Heather from Beckley.

The other girl had a Western shirt tucked into tight jeans, with Justin boots, a Resistol hat, and a belt that looked like a rope tied around her waist. They were a couple of beguilingly belleish sweethearts; Hillbilly Hotties of the first degree.

Riley: "Damn!"

Thearl: "Yeah, the driver is Heather Marshall. She goes to Emory and Henry down in Virginia and comes from old coal money in Beckley. Stinking rich and a good ole girl. The other one is Sharon ... something or other. Her dad is a doctor in Bristol and she comes home with Heather on the weekends sometimes."

The next morning Riley woke up in the back of Thearl's truck which was parked in front of the cabin. Riley stumbled over to the pump, brought up some water, took a big drink, then stuck his swollen head under the cold water. He shuffled over and leaned against a tree and took a huge leak.

In the cabin, Thearl was eating breakfast when Riley eased in and said, "Oh my head. What happened? I don't remember anything. What was in that stuff?"

Thearl pointed to the stove and said, "Have some coffee and get some food on your stomach. You'll be fine."

Riley: "Fine my ass. I'm dying here." Thearl: "You did have a large time last night. I didn't know you were such a singer."

Riley: "Singer? Hell I can't even carry a tune."

Thearl: "There were a number of people at the party last night who would probably agree with that." Riley: "Oh no, what have I done?"

Thearl: "Heather seemed to like it though. She wrote her phone number down on a little piece of paper and stuck it in your pocket." Riley tore through his pockets until he found it then said, "You mean I was with one of the hottest girls I've ever seen, and I can't remember it? Oh God."

Thearl laughed and said, "Yeah, you got ripped on the Angel's share last night."

Riley: "The Angel's share, what's that?"

"The government has spent the past several decades forcing Blacks and Whites to work together, go to school together, and live in the same communities. Of course it hasn't worked. It's just destroyed our schools and neighborhoods and our society, but they keep trying."

Thearl: "That's the tiny amount of vapor that escapes into the air when the brew is being made."

Later as they sat on the porch sipping coffee Riley said, "Last night, I think I dreamed about an albino bear."

Thearl chuckled and said, "That might be because at the party your new cousin Larry was telling you about hunting an albino bear up here."

Riley: "Is there an albino bear up here?"

Thearl: "Why, no. Didn't you notice how carefully he was watching your face while he was telling you that story?"

"He was watching to see how much of it you were believing. And you believed it all. There are bears up here, but albino bears? I don't think so."

Riley: "I can't get over how nice and friendly everyone up here is. You know hillbillies have a reputation for being, how should I put it, stand-offish."

Thearl: "Well, we've got good reason. The people who live up here have been ripped off by outsiders for over a hundred years. The logging companies, the coal barons, revenueurs, now the DEA buzzing around in helicopters. It's been one group after another coming in here and ... President Rutherford B. Hayes sent spies in here pretending to be peddlers, cattle merchants and timber merchants, land buyers, just to catch us making liquor and lock us up. They stripped the mountains of trees, they dug up the coal and left us with no money and Black Lung. Yeah, excuse us for being a little stand-offish."

Riley: "Sorry, man, I didn't know." Then to change the subject; "I'll tell you what I'd do with this place if I had some money."

Thearl: "What would that be?"

Riley: "I'd make it a Whites-only wilderness camping area."

Thearl: "Are you crazy? There's not a Black person within about fifty miles of here. And Blacks aren't exactly known to be enthusiastic about camping anyway."

Riley: "I know that, but you see there are a lot of White people who think it is a mistake for different races to try and live together. And there are a lot of Black people and people of other races who feel the same way."

"Unfortunately the government has spent the past several decades forcing Blacks and Whites to work together, go to school together, and live in the same communities."

"Of course it hasn't worked. It's just destroyed our schools and neighborhoods and our society, but they keep trying."

Thearl: "People aren't going to come all the way up here just to go camping."

Riley: "True. Most people who supported this idea would never come here, but I would present it as an investment in the future. You see, there are several White organizations, and many individuals, that advocate a White living space, a homeland, a separate part of the county for Whites only."

"But those ideas seem wack to a lot of White people when the government has been enforcing just the opposite for about fifty years now. And they get more adamant about it all the time."

Thearl: "Yeah, that is kinda far fetched."

Riley: "If you could get enough people to contribute a hundred dollars a year for an all-White place to camp you could invest that money into buying more land."

Thearl: "People come here from all over to run the Gauley River. It's got a hundred rapids in a twenty-five mile stretch, but I don't think anyone would come up here just to go camping."

Riley: "I was thinking about it on the drive down here. Wondering what I could do with the land. You could tell people to think of it as insurance in the unlikely event of societal breakdown because of terrorism, economic collapse, natural disaster, race war, or whatever."

"They would have a safe all-White place to get away to. A place where they had been camping and were familiar with."

Thearl: "Race war? The people around here are not all that concerned with Blacks. What few Blacks there are have been here as long as we have. They're our Blacks. They aren't a bunch of gangbangers and criminals. They're mostly farmers."

Riley: "Yeah, but this is an unusual situation up here. In the rest of the country Blacks are thirteen percent of the population and they're responsible for over seventy percent of the crime. They rape and murder White people every day and the media covers it up. There is a war against White people going on and the media makes it look as if Whites are committing all the crime. So as this war heats up a lot of White people are gonna wish they had a safe place to get away to. But it would cost thousands of dollars to, you know, have that damn road scrapped, clear the old logging road enough for people to drive up there. Set up a Web site. Mail out thousands of solicitations."

Thearl: "And how would you know who to mail the offer to?"

Riley: "The existing White organizations should be willing to share their mailing lists, or at least to tell their members about it. We wouldn't be any threat to them because I would make it clear that we are not into politics, no one would have to adhere to a belief system, and we don't have any leaders. There are individuals and organizations out there that are committed to race, and they have the best of intentions, but they haven't offered any solutions. What is

Thearl: "Why Blackstone Camp?"

Riley: "Because it has the word camp in it, and it sounds friendly, and...say it three times real fast."

Thearl: "Blackstone Camp, Blackstone Camp, Blackstone Camp. I don't get it."

Riley: "Blacks don't camp."

there to actually do? Educate more White people? Read another book? Get someone elected? What about the thousands who haven't been so slow to realize what is going on? What are they supposed to do? Wait for the others to catch up? Anyone who doesn't realize what is going on by now must be purposefully avoiding the issue, or hopelessly brainwashed by the media. In the meantime we could be acquiring land that people could actually go to and use and enjoy. It wouldn't be a power trip, it would be helping their dream of a White homeland come true. I think that an idea like this would appeal to a lot of guys who would say, 'I'm no racist, but I want what is best for my family. That's why my kids go to private school, we live in an all-White community, and we belong to a private, White campground."

Thearl: "Well this is starting to make sense. What would you call it?"

Riley: "Maybe something like The White Conservancy, like the Nature Conservancy because the Nature Conservancy doesn't have lobbyists, they don't try to change the environmental laws, they just take your money and invest it in land. No, not the White Conservancy ... Blackstone Camp. Yeah, that's it."

Thearl: "Why Blackstone Camp?"

Riley: "Because it has the word camp in it, and it sounds friendly, and...say it three times real fast."

Thearl: "Blackstone Camp, Blackstone Camp, Blackstone Camp. I don't get it."

Riley: "Blacks don't camp."

Thearl laughs: "Oh. Cool."

Riley: "If you could get a hundred dollars a year from a thousand people, that would be, what, a hundred thousand dollars a year. With that kind of money, you could start buying land in different parts of the country. People would have to think of it as taking one minute once a year to write a check that insures their survival. For a hundred dollars a year they get a place to go camping and the security and peace of mind of knowing that they and their loved ones have a safe all-White place to go in an emergency. And if they never visit the property it will still be there for their racial brothers in perpetuity. A White Homeland. Valhalla."

Thearl: "But what if you had people who paid their hundred dollars and then wanted to live up there year round?"

Riley: "I thought about that. You'd have to tell people that until some emergency situation arose members would be limited to a two week stay twice a year, plus x number of weekends a year, or something like that. And you'd have to have some rules, you know, no guns, no hunting, no drugs. To keep the law off you."

They sat in silence for several minutes then Thearl said, "I don't want to sound like you, but would this be legal, Whites only?"

Riley: "Sure. A private campground. No problem. I would have to incorporate and deed the property to the corporation for liability purposes, and to make it harder for anyone to sue. Of course if a minority sued for membership it would just bring publicity and more members."

Thearl: "Why don't you go to one of those existing White organizations you were talking about with this idea?"

Riley: "Because they're political, and they've all been branded as neo-Nazi or hate groups by the Jews and their Politically Correct, liberal followers. Once that name-calling starts you're doomed. It's because those groups are doing such a good job of waking people up and educating them that they get attacked. What I have in mind is a land acquisition company. No philosophy, no platform, nothing to attack. No one to attack. No hate, no overhead, no meetings. A stealth organization that flies under the radar of the Jewish watchdogs. An organization that just buys land for White people to go camping on. What could be more wholesome? Just a bunch of happy campers."

After a few minutes of silence Thearl said, "So how much are we talking about?"

Riley: "I don't know - ten thousand?"

Thearl: "Come on I want to show you something." They hiked up the same trail they had taken before and when they reached the ridge Thearl slapped a tree and said, "Here's the answer to all your problems."

Riley: "What? A tree?"

Thearl: "A hundred year old Black Walnut tree."

Riley: "So?"

Thearl: "It's worth more than ten thousand dollars."

Riley: "Bull - shit!"

Thearl: "It's the only big one around here that I know of. But a logging company isn't going to come up here for just one tree. They'll want to log the whole place and you don't want that, so we'd have to cut it down and get it to the saw mill ourselves."

Riley: "Didn't we walk right by here yesterday?"

Thearl: "Yeah."

Riley: "Why didn't you tell me about it then?"

Thearl: "I didn't know where your heart was then. Hey, you remember Billy Wayne?"

Riley: "No."

Thearl: "Well you should, you were dancing with him last night."

Riley: "Oh no."

Thearl: "Oh don't worry, you just hooked elbows and circled around in a jig a couple of times. Anyway, he's got a logging truck and Robert Earl, remember him?"

Riley: "No."

Thearl: "Well, he's got a grader, and they'd both wait until you got the tree money for you to pay em. I've got a chain saw...I say we go for it."

Riley: "I don't know, this is one bigass tree. Have you ever done this before?"

Thearl: "Why hell yes."

Riley: "Okay, lets do it."

For the next few days they worked on the tree, but Riley wasn't very handy with the chain saw. Thearl told him that if he had been a pioneer he wouldn't have made it to Philadelphia. Thearl knew just how to cut the tree to get it down the mountain closer to the road. He cut the limbs on the side of the tree that would hit the mountain, but he didn't cut all the way through. He let them break, fall and peel some of the bark off as they fell. Doing this left that side of the tree smoother and running with sap.

When Thearl cut through the trunk he and Riley yelled, "Timber." Thearl dropped the chainsaw as the tree came crashing down. When the tree hit the side of the mountain the earth shook and the tree bounced a couple of times before rocketing down the mountain side. Thearl leaped up on the end of the trunk, struck a surfer pose and rode the tree as it shot through the woods clearing a path down the mountain. Riley ran behind laughing and yelling, "Hang ten, Thearl. Ride that bad boy."

A few weeks later the membership forms and checks began to trickle in. Then the news of a Whites only campground went out over the AP.

One night talk show host Jay Lego said, "There's a new campground in West Virginia, where else, that is for White people only. I guess they're worried about Blacks coming there and lowering their property values. In West Virginia, right?"

Then to his Black band leader he said, "Do you go camping?" The band leader laughed and said, "Let me tell you about Blacks and camping - we don't go."

About two months later Riley and Thearl pulled up to a realtor's office in Thearl's old truck. They had been exploring and camping for a week, and the truck was covered with mud. Riley had not shaved or had his hair cut since moving to West Virginia. They were both wearing overalls and looked raggedy.

The realtor was a fifty something year old man who looked as if he played a lot of golf. He looked out the plate glass front window then said to his female co-worker, "Look what just came down from the hills. I hope they're just coming in to ask for directions."

Riley and Thearl shambled in. Riley was carrying a stained Styrofoam cup and Thearl held a crumpled map.

Thearl: "We been out looking at that big piece of property on Highway 37. How much do they want for it?"

The realtor smiled a phony smile and said, "Boys I'm afraid you're a little out of your league there. That is the largest privately owned piece of property in the state. Twenty square miles of beautiful, undeveloped mountains with streams, waterfalls, caves, and a lake. It's a natural wonder, just beautiful."

He paused and when the guys didn't say anything, he said, "The owners are asking $2.9 million."

The realtor looked at them with raised brows, holding back a laugh, waiting for their response.

Riley brought the Styrofoam cup up to his mouth and spit a big glob of brown tobacco juice into it then looked the realtor in the eye and said, "See if they'll take two million cash."

The End . . . or the Beginning.

ESSENTIAL BOOKS FOR WHITE CHILDREN

In the face of the collapsing educational system and its destructive anti-White agenda, the task of properly educating our children has become one of the most important tasks for any healthy White family today. It is for this reason that National Vanguard Books has a special section devoted to providing valuable, educational, and entertaining books for younger readers. Our criteria for listing a children's book are that the book must contain no racially destructive propaganda, either in text or illustrations; that the book should serve a racially constructive purpose by providing White role models, instilling White values, or building a sense of White identity through the teaching of White history and legend. Even books for very young readers may be constructive, if only by teaching love for animals, reverence for Nature, or proper standards of behavior for White children.

McGUFFEY'S ECLECTIC READERS

Catalog Item: 984 US $ 59.95

Before racial integration led to the reduction of scholastic performance and to the weakening of academic standards in America's public schools, McGuffey's Readers were a standard source from which children were taught reading and grammar. One look at the pages of these volumes will show you how very far our educational system has fallen in the past fifty years. Most people alive today can't remember when a child of age 12 had to read at what might be considered at the college level today, and yet, once upon a time, it was so. The series of books begins with a basic alphabet and sentence-structure primer and, with the first volume, begins with simple stories, many of which teach a good moral lesson. Subsequent volumes in the series become steadily more challenging, as the stories become longer and more complex in content and in language style. By the end of the series, the child who masters the material will be more literate than many high school graduates.

Hardcover set of seven volumes (the six readers and a primer) — 1600 pages total.

Amazing color illustrations. Some of the short stories are: The Hare and the Tortoise, The Fox and the Grapes, The Lion and the Mouse, The Grasshopper and the Ants, The Town Mouse and the City Mouse, The Two Goats, The Crow and the Swan, The Wolf in Sheep's Clothing, etc.

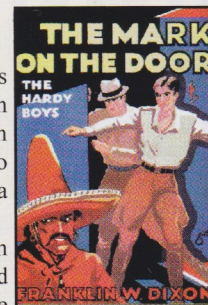

Large format: Ages 5-8. 48 pages — Hard Cover

HARDY BOYS - THE MARK ON THE DOOR

Catalog Item: 1008 US $ 14.95

After a Mexican driving a hired motorboat almost collides with The Sleuth on Barmet Bay, Frank and Joe are drawn into a mystery. The Mexican, Pedro Vincenzo, has been selling worthless stock in a phony oil company to unsuspecting White Americans, but the state is without a good case against Mexican con-artists. This excellent story highlights the differences between mestizos and Whites. This is the 13th book in the series, and it is a reprint of the original story published in 1927, not one of those liberal rewrites.

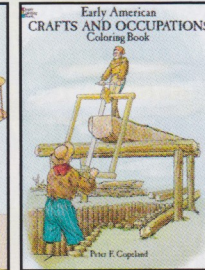

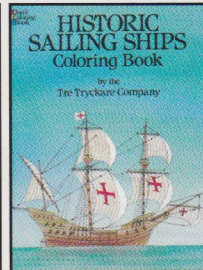

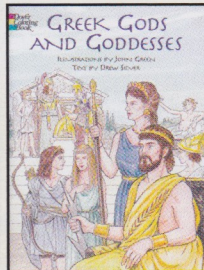

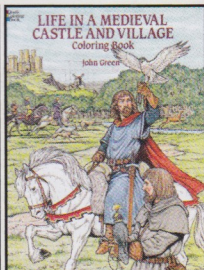

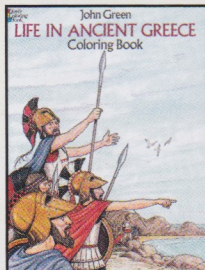

219 pages — Hard Cover

WHITE HISTORY COLORING BOOKS

Each of these large format books - Life in Ancient Greece (#692); Life in a Medieval Castle and Village (#693); Life in Celtic Times (3714); Greek Gods and Goddesses (#1007); Historical Sailing Ships (#697); History of Flight (#695); and Early American Crafts and Occupations (#696); are a delightful way to deliver a brief history lesson through an interactive picture to be colored on each page. Parents may read the lessons to very young children while the latter color the pictures.

Kill Ignorance

Knowledge is our single greatest weapon in the struggle for the continued existence of our race and civilization. The provision of knowledge is one of the most important reasons for the existence of the National Alliance, and its book distribution arm, National Vanguard Books. We are proud to be one of the largest distributors of pro-White material in the world today, with a catalog of over 600 books, videos, CDs and audio recordings.

We also offer in-depth research, like the just-updated edition of Who Rules America? detailing the most important factor affecting the plight of White Americans today: Jewish control of the mass media.

We are building our own media: the magazine you hold in your hands forms part of our public outreach program which includes billboards, leaflets, stickers, and our weekly radio broadcast, American Dissident Voices, which reaches thousands and thousands around the world on short wave radio and through the Internet.
